

A SOCIETY TRAGEDY.

Married Belle at Omaha Shoots Her Lover on the Street.

Says She Tried to Get Him to Confess to Her Husband.

Attributes His Influence Over Her to Mesmeric Power.

OMAHA, Neb., Oct. 27.—Mrs. Ella Rudiger, a prominent and handsome society leader, walked up to Henry J. Reiser on a busy thoroughfare of South Omaha last night, fired a bullet through his brain, and followed the murder with an effort at self-destruction.

Reiser was a well-known young single man and a member of a number of popular Omaha social clubs. He was connected with the management of John Cudahy's packing interests in Omaha.

Mrs. Ella Rudiger is the wife of a well-known Omaha resident, who is also connected with the Cudahy interests in this city.

It was 8 o'clock when three shots from a heavy calibre revolver startled the hundreds of people passing the corner of Twenty-fourth and J streets. Immediately following the reports the bodies of a man and a woman, handsomely dressed, fell to the pavement. She was within a foot of her victim.

The first shot, she claims, was fired to cause the young man to turn around, but he did not turn. She then sent a bullet into his body.

The excited woman gazed at her awful work and then placed the revolver at her head and pulled the trigger. The ball grazed her hair and dazed her. She talked freely of what she had done and continually asked: "Is he dead yet?"

Yes, I shot to kill. It was for my husband to do, but he would not, and so I did it myself. The wretch has given me enough cause and I hope I have accomplished what I undertook.

I have known Mr. Reiser for about two years, but intimately for only about one year, she continued. "I loved the man at first, and do not deny it. My conduct has worked on my mind until I concluded to make a clean breast of it to my husband. I did so."

"I then wanted Mr. Reiser to admit my relations to my husband in order that he might get a divorce. This Mr. Reiser refused to do. He denied everything to me about running away with him but of late he had changed his mind."

"I watched for him when he passed up the street this evening. We met on Twenty-fourth street and talked for about thirty minutes. I urged him to go to my husband and make a confession, but he refused to do so. As we were about to separate I drew my pistol, which I had in my pocket, and fired one shot in the air in the hope of making him stop. When he did not stop or turn around, I fired to strike him."

"When he fell, I placed the weapon at my own head with the intention of ending my life, and pulled the trigger. I am sorry I did not succeed—no, I am not, either. I am too good a woman to die for such a flimsy reason as he was."

Mrs. Rudiger wrote a long letter a few hours before the tragedy, in which she explained that Reiser's influence was the result of mesmeric power, and she could only break the spell by killing him. She is now in jail.

THE PURCHASE OF EL CID.

The "Evening World's" Story Excites the Maritime World.

El Cid's Past Performance and Adaptability for War Service.

The purchase of the Morgan line steamship El Cid by Charles R. Flint & Co., as exclusively reported in yesterday's "Evening World," for some South American Republic, presumably Brazil, was the talk of the hour in maritime circles this morning. Those conversant with the record and capacity of El Cid were unanimous in the opinion that she could be altered into a very fast and efficient warship.

The ship was a well-known young single man and a member of a number of popular Omaha social clubs. He was connected with the management of John Cudahy's packing interests in Omaha.

The twenty feet six inches in length by thirteen feet in diameter, a boiler has six furnaces. The total grate surface is 400 square feet and the total heating surface 10,000 square feet.

The engine pistons have no tailrods, but are fitted instead with adjustable followers. The valves are of the piston-valve variety, placed on the front of the engine, and close to the cylinders. The surface condenser has 6,000 square feet of cooling surface, water being furnished by an independent centrifugal circulating pump. The crank-shaft is sixteen inches in diameter, and the propeller is four-bladed, and of the built-up pattern, measuring eighteen feet in diameter, and with a pitch of twenty-two feet.

El Cid has a bunker capacity of about 1,000 tons of coal, and she does not ordinarily consume more than sixty tons a day. Propulsion is provided by vertical expansion engines, and the cylinders measure respectively for high, intermediate and low pressure, 35, 42 and 48 inches.

El Cid has steam steering gear in the foremast pilot-house and screw hand-gear in the after house. A steam winch and steam capstan are provided for handling anchors and masts, and there is a complete electric light plant with 112 incandescent lamps, scattered through the engine-room, deck-house and quarters occupied by the crew and cargo. A powerful search-light is located on the stand on the foremast.

El Cid is well qualified for the demands of an armed cruiser. She is one of the fastest vessels of her class ever launched. On her maiden voyage from New Orleans to New York she made the run in the fastest time on record, making the trip from Mississippi bar to Sandy Hook bar in four days, two hours and fifteen minutes. The best previous run was made by El Sol, of the same line, in four days, two hours and thirty-nine minutes. El Cid made the following days' runs: 28, 37, 46, 51 and 61 knots. The total distance was 1,015 knots, and the average speed per hour was 16.24 knots.

This showing is regarded as remarkable, as El Cid was built as a freighter, and fifteen knots an hour was almost the maximum of speed hoped for. Under more favorable conditions she could greatly exceed the speed of her famous predecessor. Her machinery was designed by Horace See, a naval designer, who incorporated into her mechanism many features peculiar to warships.

NO ONE TO CLAIM HER BODY.

The Drowned Woman Still in the Morgue Unidentified.

Keeper White Says that in Life She Was Beautiful.

The body of the young woman taken from the East River at the foot of East Fourteenth street is still in the Morgue unidentified. Morgue-Keeper White says the woman was once beautiful, although four days in the water have destroyed all evidences of beauty.

The clothes worn by the woman indicate that she had been in good circumstances. She had small hands and feet.

Albert Thompson, who is in command of one of the city scows, discovered the body floating in the water a short distance off the Fourteenth street dump. A gust of wind caught a long tress of dark-brown hair, and Thompson then knew it was a woman's head. An eddy made by the strong tide brought the body to the surface, and it floated with an entire length visible. A mass of brown hair floated about the woman's head. Thompson got into a boat and towed the body to the dock.

Policeman Lawlor, of the Union Market station, made an examination of the clothing, but found nothing that might lead to an identification except a pocket-book with the letter "D" in steel on the flap. The pocket-book contained $3.50 and a small key.

The body was taken to the Morgue, where the following description was entered:

Twenty-three years old, five feet six inches in height, very long dark brown hair, several inches left off, lower jaw missing. Weight about 135 pounds.

The young woman wore a black cloth frock trimmed with astrakhan fur. Her waist and skirt were of blue serge. The trimming on each was black satin. One petticoat had a gray and white stripe running through it. On the chemise there were some fancy needlework. The stockings were a very light brown. The corsets were white and blue. The shoes were buttoned and of good quality. In the pocket of the dress was found a pair of fan kid gloves.

Morgue-Keeper White says that the body had been in the water four or five days. All but the face is comparatively well preserved. No marks of violence were noticeable on the body. It is supposed that the body of a woman so well dressed is making so long without some inquiry being made, but the police say that no report has been turned in of the disappearance of a woman answering her description.

The body is in one of the new lock-boxes recently built at the Morgue. It will be kept as long as possible before being buried in Potter's Field.

PEDESTRIANS HAVE RIGHTS.

Court of Appeals Defines Their Privileges on Sidewalks.

The Court of Appeals has just handed down a very important decision affecting the rights of pedestrians to the exclusive use of the sidewalks.

Frank Gott, a boy thirteen years of age, while walking through Jay street on Aug. 22, 1890, was struck by a wagon belonging to Frederick Akers.

He brought suit through his counsel, Alfred and Charles Stekler, and recovered a verdict against Akers in the Superior Court for $1,000.

Stekler claimed that the accident having happened on the sidewalk by the boy being caught between the platform and the rear end of the wagon, it was negligence on the part of the driver to come on the sidewalk in disregard of the rights of pedestrians.

The defendant appealed to the Superior Court, General Term, and that court affirmed the judgment. The defendant took the case to the Court of Appeals, and that court today handed down a decision upholding the right of the public to the use of the street, and that the sidewalk belonged to the pedestrian.
